The Washington and Lee Baccalaureate Service arises from the religious traditions of the University, a university founded by disciplined, thrifty and strong-willed Scots-Irish Presbyterians. They came to this valley in search of freedom from religious constraint and with a desire to fashion a community of hard-working individuals. From that disposition, they created a place of learning that has been ever non-sectarian. The roots of this ceremony go back to the 18th century, and, as it was then, it remains a time for us to reflect on the values that have supported our educational approach and the purpose of an education in the life of a caring individual.
