Student Readiness to Return to W&L: Descriptions of Certain Essential Requirements and Expectations

Undergraduate students wishing to return to Washington and Lee University following a Withdrawal or Leave of Absence are expected to provide documentation that they are ready to resume full time academic and campus life. The following description of certain essential requirements and expectations for academic and campus life at Washington and Lee is intended to help students, their families, mentors, health care professionals, or other advisors, as applicable, in making an informed assessment of a student's readiness to return to Washington and Lee.

Academic Requirements and Expectations:

1. Washington and Lee has three terms: Fall and Winter terms are each 13 weeks, followed by a four-week Spring Term. The unusual 13-13-4 calendar means that the pace of courses in all three terms is accelerated compared to that at most other institutions with longer terms.
2. Each student who has not completed graduation requirements must register as a full-time student for each term enrolled. The minimum academic load in both the Fall and Winter Terms is 12 credits (typically four classes). The minimum academic load in the Spring Term is four credits (typically one class). Washington and Lee University does not allow part-time students.
3. Participation in the work of a course is clearly a precondition for a student receiving credit in that course. Students are expected to attend courses for which they are registered. A student taking an unauthorized underload or maintaining an unapproved extended absence from classes (two weeks or more without contacting the appropriate dean's office) may be required to withdraw from the University.
4. Most courses meet for an hour or an hour and a half. Laboratory courses typically meet for three- or four-hour blocks. Students are expected to be present, mentally alert, and actively participating during class meetings.
5. Washington and Lee University is a highly selective institution with rigorous courses. Students are expected to work on their own outside of formal class meetings, and the time commitment required for mastery of the material and completion of reading and assignments is significant.
6. Students are expected to submit all graded work by the due date designated by the course instructor. Extensions are not generally given, even in cases where students might have multiple assignments or tests during a short period of time. As a result, the ability to manage one's time and manage multiple tasks and deadlines is essential.
7. Students are expected to communicate with faculty promptly if problems arise and respond to faculty inquiries quickly. Failure to do so does not alter class requirements.
8. All students at Washington and Lee are expected to make steady progress toward completing their degree requirements. Their progress is judged by the quality of their academic work as measured by their grade-point averages. Failure to maintain both a cumulative and a term grade-point average above 2.000 at the end of any academic term will result in academic probation or in the student being suspended under the Automatic Rule.

9. A grade of Incomplete can only be assigned at the end of a term for cases in which, due to some cause beyond the student's reasonable control, the work of the course has not been completed or the final examination has been deferred. The grade is not intended to be used in cases where the student has neglected the course work or otherwise struggled throughout much of the term.

Campus Residence Life Requirement and Expectation:

Students are expected to live on campus for their first three years. Single rooms are not always available.

Note: The University applies its leave of absence, withdrawal, and reinstatement policies and associated procedures in a nondiscriminatory manner, in consultation with qualified professionals, as appropriate, and to make each reinstatement or readmission determination based on an individualized assessment of that student's situation and what is in the best interests of the student, the campus community, and the University.
